GUIDE 2 OF 2 · FOR THE CLIENT

How to read, discuss and pay a Living Pay invoice

A Living Pay invoice is a web page you can talk to. Ask what it's for, ask to pay in parts or a little later, ask about a discount, then pay with PayPal or a card. You don't need an account with Living Pay.

Tip: This guide is for the person receiving an invoice. In the examples you are Zainab Musa from Musa Bakes, and you've been sent an $800 invoice by Kora Studio for a bakery logo and menu board.

STEP 1

Open your invoice

You'll get an email from the business with your invoice. Click the link in it to open your invoice page.

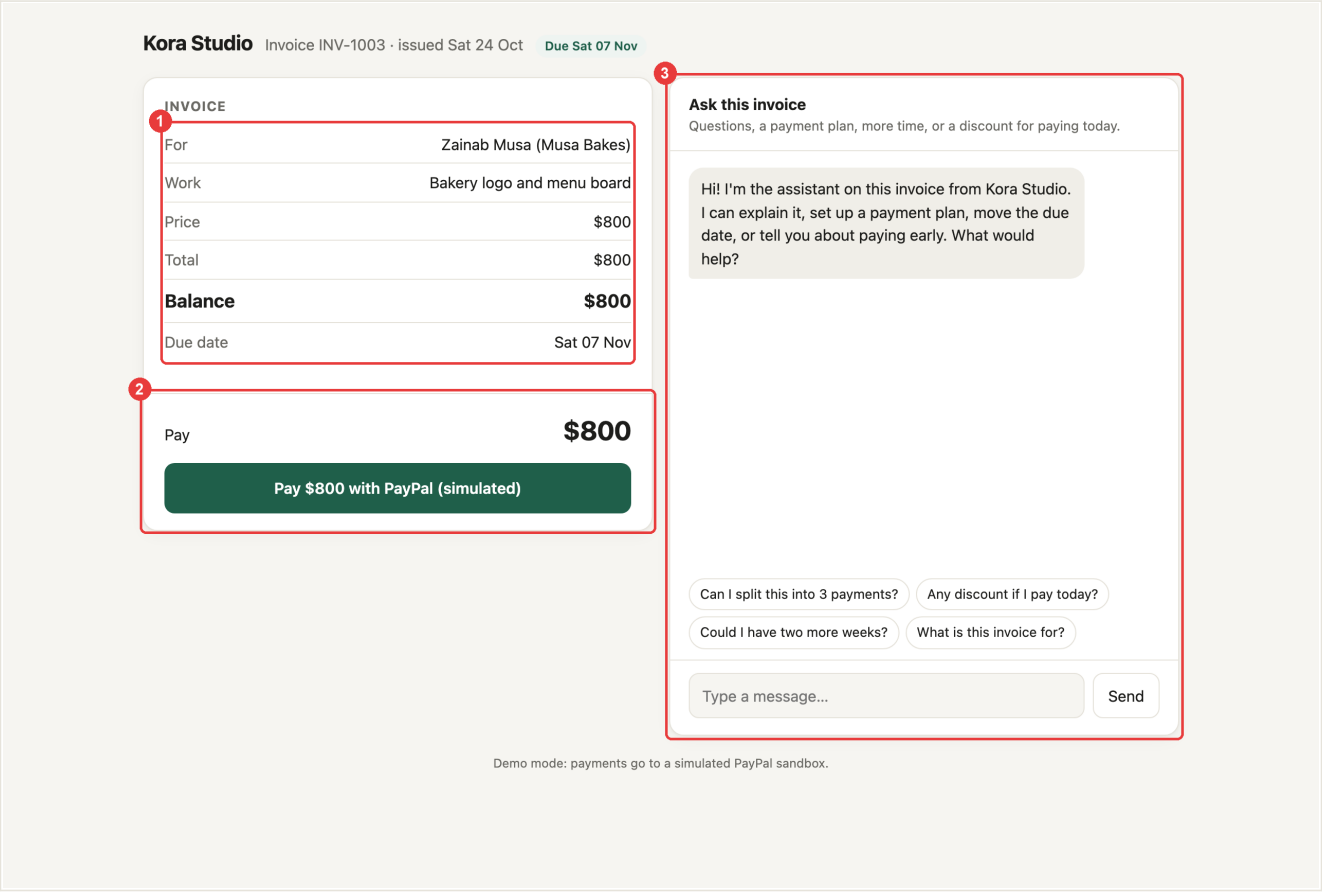

1 The email. The last link opens your personal invoice page. Only people with this link can see it.

Your invoice page

Your invoice page has three parts.

1. The invoice: who it's for, what the work was, the price and the due date.
2. Paying: how much is due and the button to pay it.
3. Ask this invoice: a chat where you can ask questions and make requests. It answers straight away.

STEP 3

Ask the invoice a question

Tap one of the ready-made questions, or type your own. Write the way you'd talk to a person.

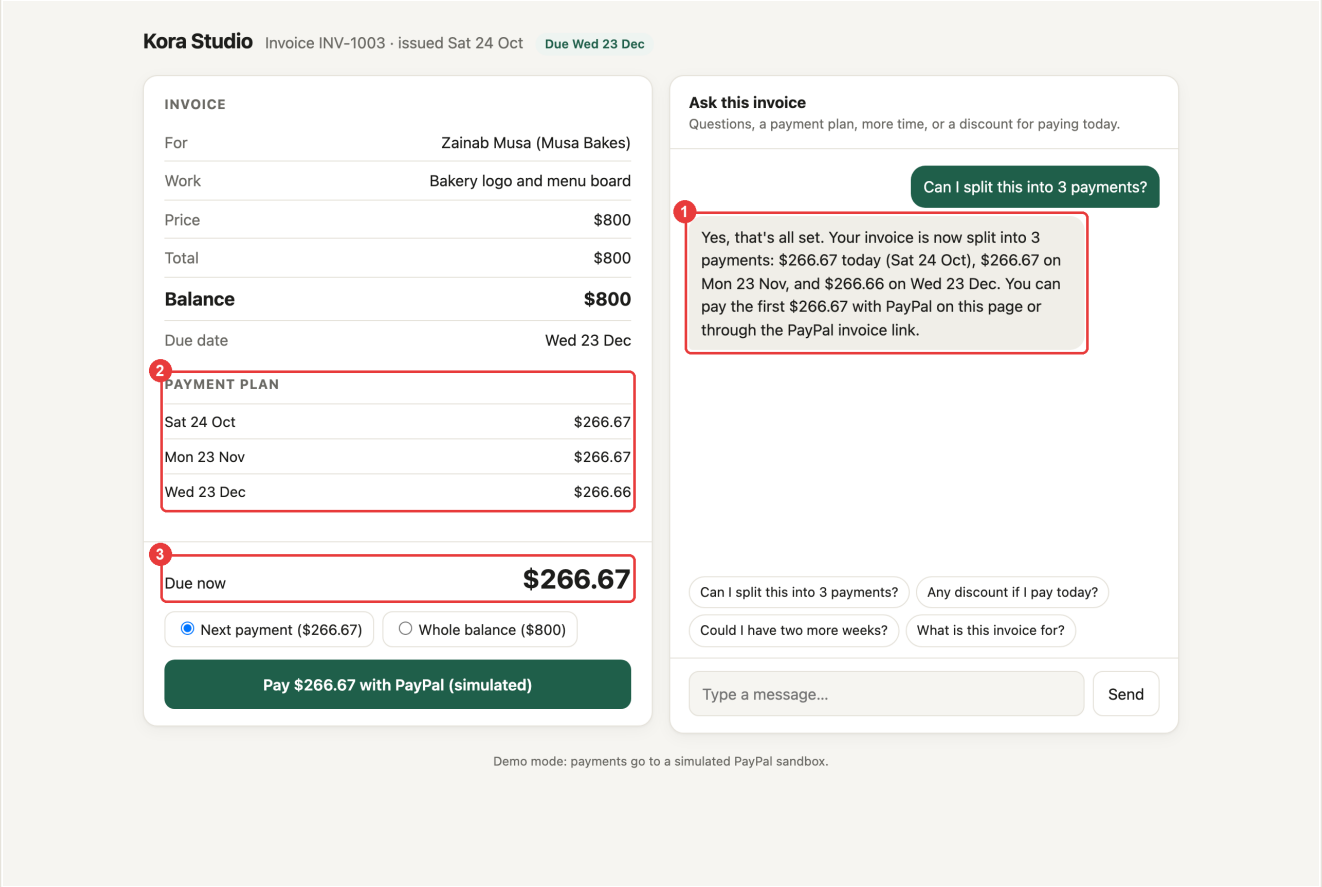

1. Tap a suggestion: a payment plan, a discount for paying today, more time, or what the invoice is for.
2. Or type your own message and press Send.

STEP 4

Pay in parts

If you'd rather pay in several smaller amounts, just ask. Requests within the business's rules are agreed immediately.

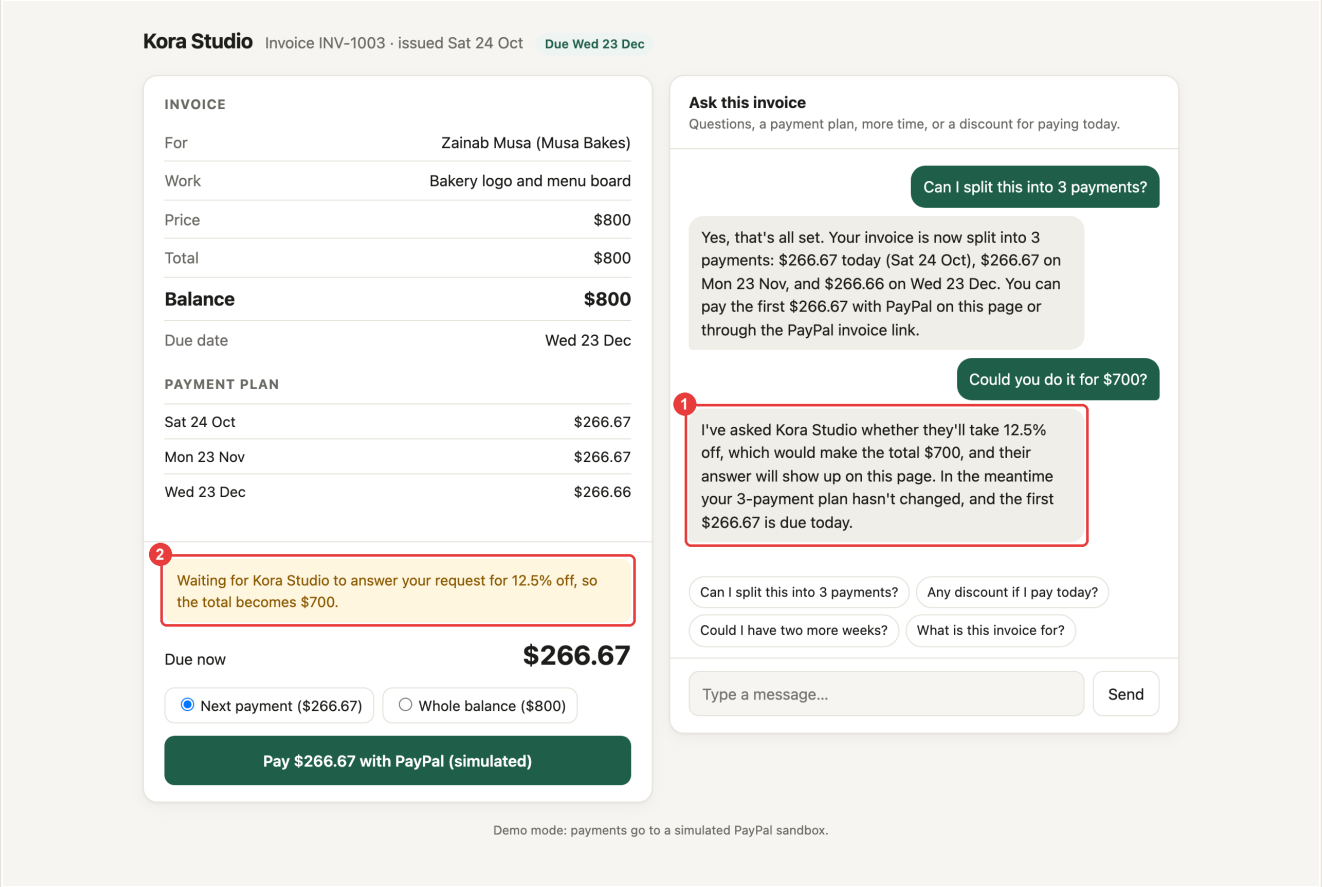

1. The invoice confirms the plan in plain words.
2. Your payment plan: each amount and when it's due.
3. What to pay now, which is only the first part.

STEP 5

Ask for a better price

You can ask for a lower price or a different deal. If it's more than the invoice may agree to itself, it asks the business for you.

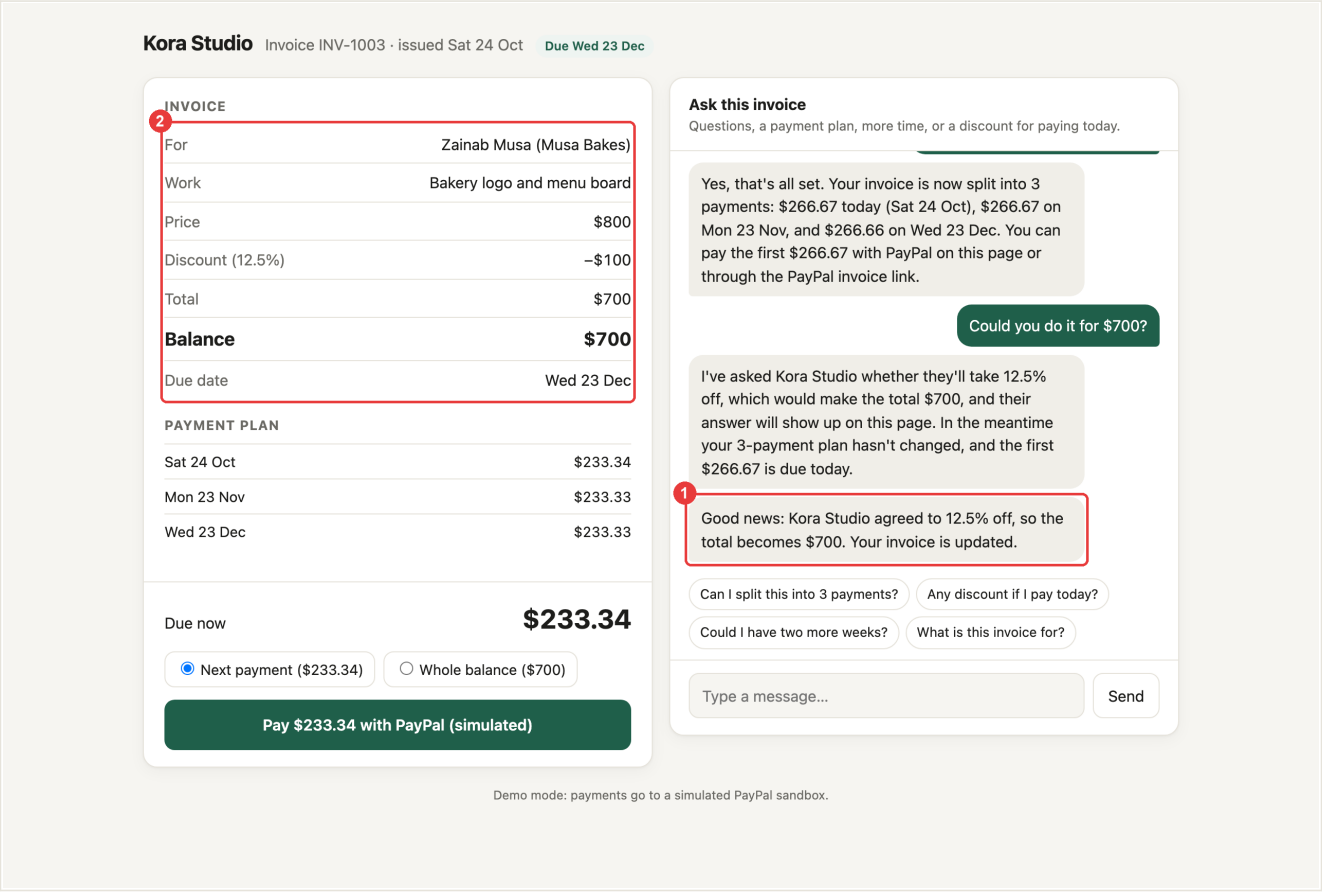

1. The invoice tells you it has asked the business.
2. A yellow note shows you're waiting for an answer. You can close the page and come back later: the answer appears here by itself.

Tip: You can still pay the current amount while you wait. Nothing changes on your invoice until the business says yes.

STEP 6

When the business answers

When the business replies, your invoice page updates on its own.

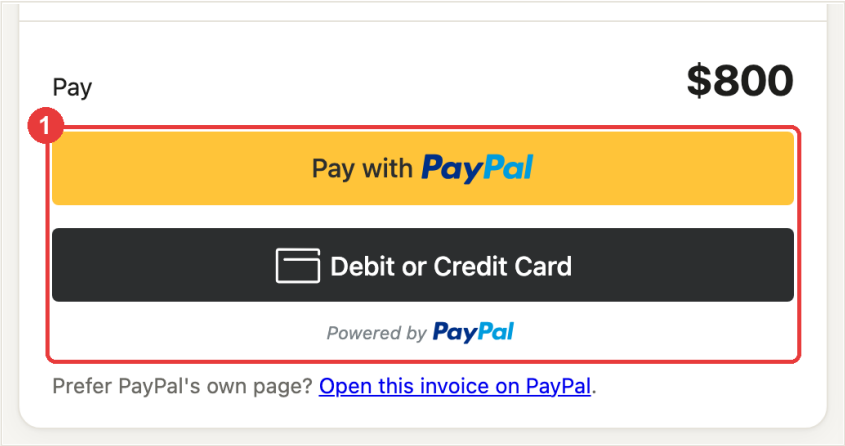

1. The answer. Here Kora Studio agreed to $700.
2. Your invoice already shows the new total, and the plan is adjusted to match.

STEP 7

Pay with PayPal

When you're ready, choose how much to pay, then click the yellow PayPal button, or Debit or Credit Card if you don't use PayPal.

1. The payment buttons. If you're on a plan, first choose Next payment or Whole balance just above them.

Tip: Your payment goes through PayPal itself. Living Pay never sees your card or PayPal password.

A PayPal window opens

Log in to PayPal and confirm the payment. When you're done the window closes, and you're back on your invoice.

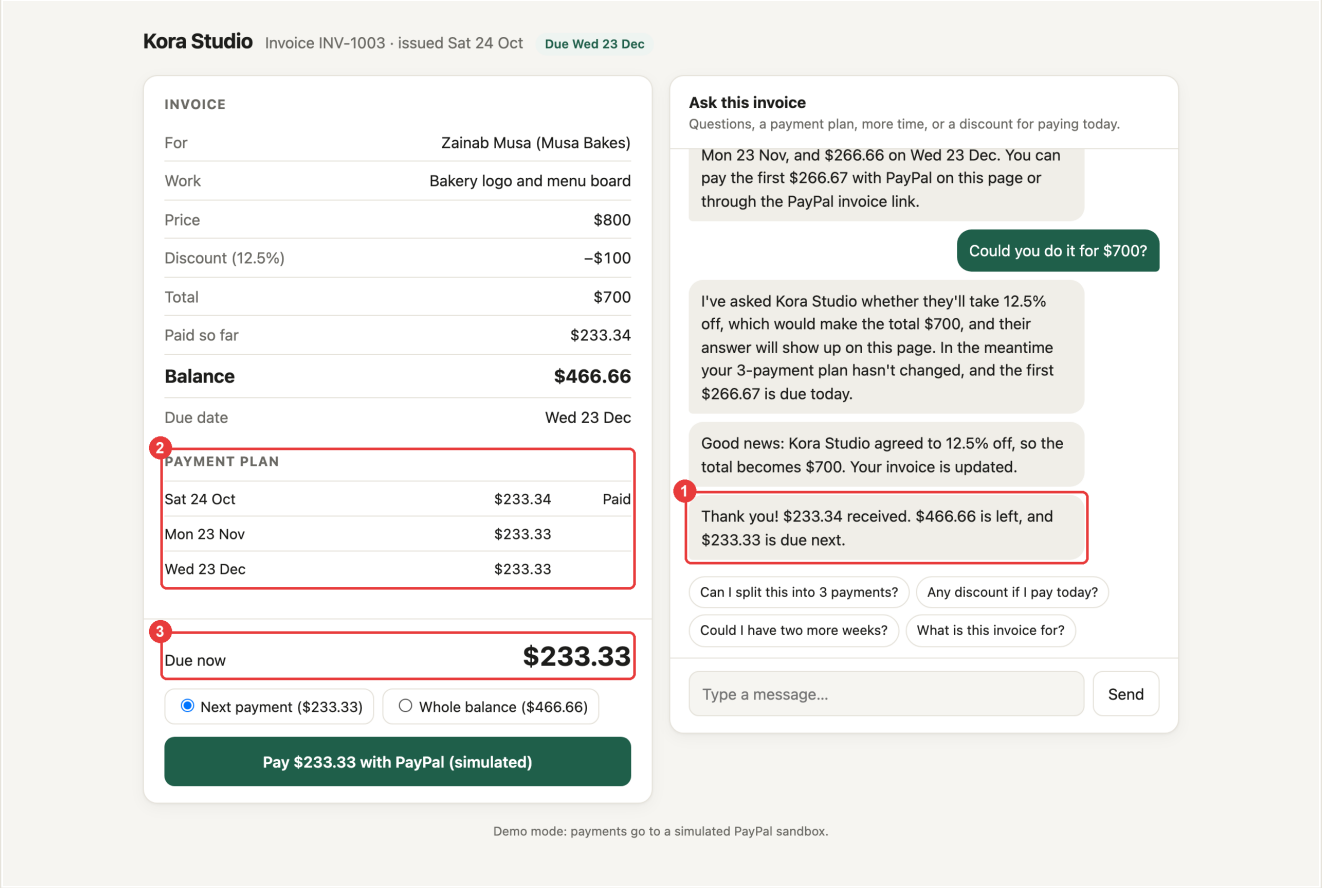

Good to know: Trying it in the practice sandbox? Log in with a sandbox Personal test account, for example amagafx121@livingpay.com, not a real PayPal account. You'll find its password in the PayPal developer site under Testing Tools → Sandbox Accounts, then the three-dot menu on that account's row → View/Edit account.

STEP 8

After you pay

The invoice thanks you straight away and shows what's left.

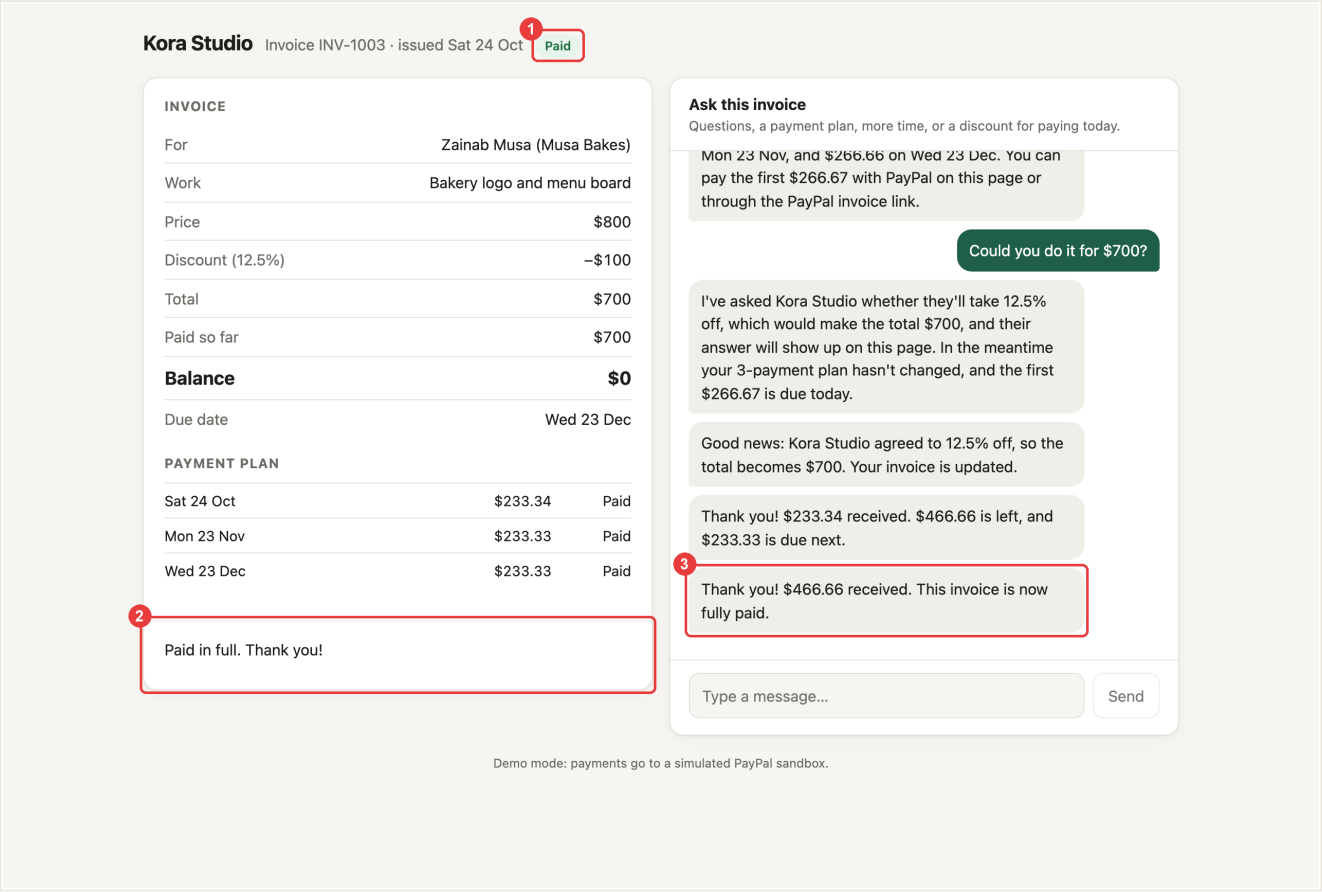

1. Confirmation of your payment, how much is left and what's due next.
2. Your plan shows the paid part as Paid.
3. The next amount due.

STEP 9

Paid in full

Once everything is paid, the invoice says so, and there's nothing more to do.

1. The invoice is marked Paid.
2. No more payments are due.
3. The final confirmation.

Good to know

What can the invoice agree to?

A payment plan, a little more time, or a discount for paying today, as far as the business allows. Anything else, it asks the business for you.

What can't it do?

It can't refund money, cancel the invoice or change the work that was agreed. For those, it passes your question to the business, who replies by email.

Is it a real person?

No. It's an assistant built into the invoice, working within rules the business set. The business sees every request and can change anything it agreed.

Can I pay without a PayPal account?

Yes. Choose Debit or Credit Card under the PayPal button.

I closed the page.

Open the link in your email again. Everything you agreed is still there.
